As we see from above there are more than 2 times more Movies than TV Shows on Netflix.

Since many movies and tv shows are made by several countries (country variable), to correctly count the total amount of content produced by each country we need to split strings in country variable and count the total occurrence of each country on its own.

[17]: s <- strsplit(NetflixDF$country, split = ", ") Total_titles_countries <- data.frame(type = rep(NetflixDF$type, sapply(s, ~length)), country = unlist(s))

`summarise()` regrouping output by 'country' (override with `.groups` argument)

[19]: w <- reshape(data=data.frame(country_amount),idvar="country", names(w)[2] <- "count_movie" names(w)[3] <- "count_tv_show"

w <- w[order(desc(w$count_movie+w$count_tv_show)),]
```

Selecting by count.TV Show

We see that the United States is a clear leader in the amount of content on Netflix. Countries as Japan, South Korea and Taiwan have more TV Shows than Movies on Netflix

0.1 Unique values in each column

[21]: unique_vals <- apply(NetflixDF, MARGIN = 2, FUN = function(x) length(unique(x))) unique_vals <- data.frame(Columns = names(unique_vals), UniqueCounts = unique_vals, stringsAsFactors = F)

```
[22]: options(repr.plot.width=10, repr.plot.height=8) unique_vals %>% ggplot(aes(x = Columns, y = UniqueCounts)) +
  geom_bar(stat = 'identity', fill="#56B4E9") + scale_x_discrete(limits = colnames(NetflixDf)) +
  geom_hline(yintercept = nrow(NetflixDf)) + geom_label(aes(x = 4, y = nrow(NetflixDf), label =
    'Number of rows in the input'), size = 5) + theme_bw()

From above, we can see that each show has a unique `show_id`. Show titles and descriptions are also almost unique for each show indicating that we don't have to worry too much about duplicate entries in the input data

Since, some of the columns have multiple data entries combined as comma separated values (like the `cast` column combining multiple actors in one entry), we will separate them into individual entries and create separate tables for the people and categories of the shows

From the above table, we observe that the reviews_from_users/ userId column, as well as the show_id column, consist of integers. Furthermore, we need to convert the genres present in the movie_data dataframe into a more usable format by the users. In order to do so, we will first create a one-hot encoding to create a matrix that comprises of corresponding genres for each of the films.

We will create a ‘search matrix’ that will allow us to perform an easy search of the films by specifying the genre present in our list.

[78]: Mtrx_Search <- cbind(Netflix_movie_data[,1:2], genre_DF2[])
      head(Mtrx_Search)

There are movies that have several genres, for example, Toy Story, which is an animated film also falls under the genres of Comedy, Fantasy, and Children. This applies to the majority of the films.

For our movie recommendation system to make sense of our ratings through recommenderlabs, we have to convert our matrix into a sparse matrix one. This new matrix is of the class ‘realRatingMatrix’. This is performed as follows:

```
[79]: Mtrx_Rating <- dcast(Netflix_rating_data, reviews_from_users~show_id, value.var =
  ,>= "weighted_average_vote", na.rm=FALSE, fun=mean)

##Netflix_rating_data<-subset(jointDF, select =_
  ,>= c("reviews_from_users","show_id","weighted_average_vote")

[80]: Mtrx_Rating <- as.matrix(Mtrx_Rating[, -1]) #remove userIds/reviews from users

Mtrx_Rating <- as(Mtrx_Rating, "realRatingMatrix") #Convert rating matrix into a_
  ,>= recommenderlab sparse matrix

Collaborative Filtering involves suggesting movies to the users that are based on collecting preferences from many other users. For example, if a user A likes to watch action films and so does user B, then the movies that the user B will watch in the future will be recommended to A and vice-versa. Therefore, recommending movies is dependent on creating a relationship of similarity between the two users. With the help of recommenderlab, we can compute similarities using various operators like cosine, pearson as well as jaccard.

[83]: mtrx_similarity <- similarity(Mtrx_Rating[1:4, ], method = which = "cosine",
as.matrix(mtrx_similarity)
image(as.matrix(mtrx_similarity), main = "User's

We develop Item Based Collaborative Filtering System. This type of collaborative filtering finds similarity in the items based on the people's ratings of them. The algorithm first builds a similar-items table of the customers who have purchased them into a combination of similar items. This is then fed into the recommendation system.

The similarity between single products and related products can be determined with the following algorithm –

For each Item i1 present in the product catalog, purchased by customer C.

And, for each item i2 also purchased by the customer C.

Create record that the customer purchased items i1 and i2.

Calculate the similarity between i1 and i2.

We build this filtering system by splitting the dataset into 80% training set and 20% test set.

$k 30

$method 'Cosine'

$normalize 'center'

$normalize_sim_matrix FALSE

$alpha 0.5

$na_as_zero FALSE

We explore the various parameters of our Item Based Collaborative Filter. These parameters are default in nature. In the first step, k denotes the number of items for computing their similarities. Here, k is equal to 30. Therefore, the algorithm will now identify the k most similar items and store their number. We use the cosine method which is the default one but you can also use pearson method.

'Recommender'

Using the getModel() function, we will retrieve the recommen_model. We will then find the class and dimensions of our similarity matrix that is contained within model_info. Finally, we will generate a heatmap, that will contain the top 20 items and visualize the similarity shared between them.

[91]: infoModel <- getModel(recommnd_model)
class(infoModel$sim)
dim(infoModel$sim)
top_items <- 20
```

'dgCMatrix'

1. 313 2. 313

[92]: #image(infoModel$sim[1:top_items, 1:top_items],main = "Heatmap of the first_ rows and columns")

The sum of rows and columns with the similarity of the objects above 0. We will visualize the sum of columns through a distribution as follows –

[93]: sum_rows <- rowSums(infoModel$sim > 0)
table(sum_rows)
sum_cols <- colSums(infoModel$sim > 0) qqplot(sum_cols, fill=I("steelblue"), col=I("red"))+ ggtitle("Distribution of_ the column count")
```

sum_rows
 0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9 10 11 12 13 14 16 20 21 24 25
70 27 23 11 10 1 7 10 5 2 10 2 8 1 3 2 9 1 1 1

`stat_bin()` using `bins = 30`. Pick better value with `binwidth`.

Create a `top_recommendations` variable which will be initialized to 10, specifying the number of films to each user. We will then use the `predict()` function that will identify similar items and will rank them appropriately. Here, each rating is used as a weight. Each weight is multiplied with related similarities. Finally, everything is added in the end.

[94]: TopRecomndtns <- 10 # the number of items to recommend to each user PredRecomndtns <- predict(object = recomnd_model, newdata = tst_DF, n = TopRecomndtns)

PredRecomndtns
```
